

"Delicious. Totally"

2016 JOSHUA

We've been saying on The Winefront for some time now - years even - that the best wines out of the Barossa Valley and McLaren Vale often aren't shiraz, or at least include a major component of other varieties. We've been saying it because it's true. This blend of grenache (60%), mataro (30%) and shiraz (10%) is yet another example of the beautiful reds coming from these regions – with shiraz as only a bit player. Teusner Joshua spends no time in oak. Effortless drinking and effortless complexity. It's something of a holy grail. It's reductive, smoky, spicy, a bit meaty, earthen, and generally savoury to its neck. It's also though ripped with anise and raspberry and assorted berries and florals, all which keeps the juices well and truly flowing. Delicious. Totally.
